The Combination Theatres Offer

Change of Bills. The theatres which show at a reduced price of admission the successes of the preceding season on Broadway are just now offering in one part of the town or another several of the plays which won the highest favor. Thus patrons of the Lexington Theatre were last night in-vited by John Cort to witness "The Yellow Ticket" and they responded in large numbers. This melodrama of Rus-sian persecution of the races is just now more timely than it was two years ago, when the piece was new. Russia is now in the thoughts of the world, and last night the audience at the Lexington Theatre, which used to be Hammerstein's

Lexington Avenue Opera House, showed the most engrossing interest in the play. When H. H. Frazee produced "A Full House" at the Longacre Theatre it was said that several other well known writers of farce had helped Fred Jackson get the play into form for the stage. If that were true or not, the result was a denial of the old saying about too many cooks. The farce was successful from the outset. Last night at the York Theatre May Vokes and her associates kept the audience in roars of laughter. Then there was the energetic Mr. Parassor Theatre a new play more or who got the business here. the Astor Theatre a new play more or less from his pen, called "Hit the Trail Holliday."
